SANTA ROSA - Approaching its third decade in business, this legal practice continues to be busy, with lots of overtime and no layoffs.

"I feel at home here. When my friends ask me what I love about my job, I just can't stop talking about the people I work with. I couldn't ask for a better position," one employee said.

"Our people make our firm what it is," said John R. O'Brien, partner. "Their professionalism, knowledge, commitment, teamwork, integrity and accountability for results are the hallmarks of our firm."

Another staff member noted: "The passion involved in our work and dedication to our clients make me very proud to be a part of this amazing group of people. We all get together often on the first Friday of the month, either at the homes of staff or attorneys."

While the work is demanding and fast paced, mutual support and respect for one another give employees the confidence and will to succeed.

"A business does not survive for over a quarter century without ups and downs, triumphs and failures. It is by, and through, those experiences that we are able to stand and face a trying economy," an employee observed.
